

Tamlika  Platinum Product Expert

I am not a Google or YouTube employee - Product Experts are volunteers

Jan 20, 2022

Hallo

Welcome to Youtube Help Community

YouTube doesn't shadowban channels. It's possible the video was flagged by our systems as potentially violative & needs to be reviewed first before it shows up in search, etc. Note that reviews are taking longer since we have limited teams due to COVID-19:

There are over 73% of adults in the United States using YouTube currently. So to safeguard the interests of all those that use it to view or produce content, YouTube enforces community guidelines.

These guidelines are a set of rules and branch into categories like harmful or dangerous content, Copyright, Child safety, etc.

The YouTube Policy guidelines get updated regularly as the requirement arises so you must ensure to keep yourself updated with them!

Give yourself time to go through your old videos and find out what could have violated YouTube's community guidelines.

You could include multiple people in this process to gain more insights!

Go back to researching and ask your audience what they want to see via your YouTube community option or through social media.

Then, start subtly tweaking your content to get on YouTube's good side after conducting your research.

Your videos may not be garnering the regular amount of views but you must not shy away from uploading videos regularly.

Keep in mind that these videos should have the changes as per YouTube community guidelines.

The platform and its people will eventually come to accept the content and lift your engagement.

In conclusion, you must not stop uploading content even if you are not garnering enough views. The engagement will eventually lift, but in the meantime, you must focus on tweaking the content you upload as per YouTube community guidelines.

I hope this answer can be useful

Thank You

Tamlika